

Please do not allow cellular telephone use on airborne aircraft!
The last thing I would want during a flight is to be stuck next to anyone talking into their phone, for any amount of time. There would be no way I could move away, since I'm confined to my seat while enroute on an airplane. There could be a situation where one person asks the passenger next to her to not talk, and a confrontation could ensue if that passenger was adamant about using their phone. The last thing we need while airborne is anything that would cause tension or confrontation. The current rule is in the best interest of the overall public - please do not relax the restriction on inflight use of cell phones. Thank you.
